Annotation: The main idea of the article is to describe the humanitarian relations between Russia and Germany, and as an example the cooperation between the Altai region and the federal Land of Saxony- Angalt. The item is to represent the difference of the meaning of such words as «humanitarian» and «humanitarian relations». The problem is that there are some differences in understanding of this type of cooperation. The author give us brief information about the history of the German national region in the Altai region, it’s participation in joint projects with Germany, learning Germany language as a home language at the local and regional levels in German national region.

Today, foreign economic activity of Russian regions based on informal relations of Heads of State, on the voluntary participation in international humanitarian projects, on the presence of friendly relations with other countries, a partnership of large enterprises, there is general ethnicity and culture. Every Country have their own interests in different parts of the world. For example, Germany has its own interests in the Altai region. These interests are manifested in the creation of common projects, investment in Altai enterprises, sales of German products in the Altai region. But this economic and political cooperation could be more effective if developed and humanitarian cooperation between Germany and the Altai Territory. Humanitarian cooperation is one of the methods of the soft power. And the Altai region in addition to high investment attractiveness has another advantage - German National District (Region), which was founded in 1990 and today is a well-developed infrastructure, in region people children can study in German schools, visit catholic churches and live in German culture.

Every country have their own interpretations of meaning “humanitarian cooperation”. For example, in the EU, is used to talk about human rights abuses and violence, the provision of emergency relief (food supply, rehabilitation of health services, mine soils etc.). But this Russian it used to talk about culture and relationship between different culterfamilies. In our (Russian) understanding of "humanitarian cooperation" covers an area of cultural relations, inter-civilizational dialogue and civil society dialogue and relations with compatriots abroad. So in that case we will talk about relations between Germany and Russian locally.
